Microsoft Expression Web 4 - James Harding

"I open my website; then I open Microsoft Expression Web 3; I" That also makes no sense. You open a website by first opening Expression Web, then going to the site menu, and opening your site from there, unless the program is set to automatically open the last site. You need to be much clearer, and precise, in describing what you are doing.

Microsoft Expression Web 3

Microsoft created Expression Web, which is where its connection to your problem ends. From your description, it sounds as if you had EW set in Application Options to automatically open the site last edited, and that you were editing your site live (a very bad idea), which is the scenario which would have caused EW to ask for your login credentials immediately upon startup.
